Ellis the Cowboy

Back in the 1800's, in Texas there was a cowboy named... Ellis. He was faster than 20 roadrunners mixed with a cheetah! He was stronger than a Tasmanian devil's bite! Once he rode on his mountain lion to Texas. He picked up the longest rattlesnake and made it into a rope. The next morning he woke up, ate some flapjacks and practiced tying his lasso (a rattle snake) to every cactus. Later at high noon, a villain named Connor came to town riding on a mustang. Ellis rode on his mountain lion (named BattleCat) to the villain. He charged like a bull at Connor. They wrestled like bears. Ellis tossed Connor to bear country. The battle was over. Ellis had won this battle. Ellis trained Connor's horse to be a good mustang. They rode off to where the wind took them. Their journey wasn't over but they had won this battle.

By Ellis J. Williams
Ellis riding to Texas

Ellis making his rope out of a rattlesnake

Ellis eating flapjacks

Ellis throwing cannon to bear country